24-hour Projected Weather Statewide:

National Weather Service, 5:52 a.m., 10/5/12

A dying cold front will stall out as it enters northern Pennsylvania today; bringing increasing clouds to the north today with chance of an afternoon shower. Skies will remain mostly sunny today across southern Pennsylvania. Today's high temperatures will range from the 60s across the northwest corner of the state to around 80 over the southeast piedmont.

A wave of low pressure riding along the stalled frontal boundary will track across northwest Pennsylvania tonight, bringing a period of steady rain to that part of the state. Across the southeast half of the state tonight will be tranquil and mild. Lows will range from the low 40s across the northwest mountains to near 60 in Philadelphia.

The low pressure system will pass north of the area early Saturday, dragging a trailing cold front through Pennsylvania. This front will bring a few showers to the state through around Midday then partial clearing is expected during the afternoon. Highs Saturday will range from the low 50s across the northwest mountains to the low 70s across the southeast piedmont.
