

Good Description

CHESTER—I received a call from landowner Bob Lynch advising that he wanted me to be aware of a new eagle nest he found near his property. I asked Bob how he was so certain that it was an eagle nest. He stated that it looked like a beaver had been building a dam about 60 feet up in an oak. Sure enough it was a new bald eagle nest.

—WCO SCOTT FREDERICK,
SADSBURYVILLE

Part of the Mission

CENTRE—I was manning the PGC exhibit at Penn State's Ag Progress Days when someone asked me why we reintroduced fishers. It seems as though many people believe the Game Commission has different motives for reintroducing a species. In the case of fishers, they used to be here and we wanted them back. Part of our job is to ensure wildlife for the future, and the fisher can be added to the list of success stories.

—WCO MICHAEL G. ONDIK,
PORT MATILDA

It's All in a Name

BEAVER—The deputies here traveled together to a recent qualification shoot in Armstrong County. Prior to the shoot, they stopped at a fast food restaurant, and as the deputies waited in line to place their order, the female deputy was approached by a lady who asked if she worked for the Fish and Boat Commission. The deputy politely told the lady that she worked for the Game Commission, and pointed to the patches on her uniform. The lady, with a sly smile on her face, pointed to the deputy's name tag. Deputy Cathy Haddock then realized that she may be working for the wrong agency.

—WCO MATTHEW G. KRAMER, BEAVER

Pulled a Fast One

Mr. Steinfelt's FFA students from Athens Area High School were looking for projects to do in Ag Mechanics Class. The Game Commission supplied them with some lumber and hardware to construct 15 wood duck boxes with great craftsmanship. On a cold winter day, the students came out to SGL 239 and erected their new boxes. The students cleaned and recorded the data on other boxes, as well. Then it came time for the only girl in the class to clean and check a box. To her surprise, not only did feathers and shavings fall out, but also a large snake. The snake turned out to be fake and the girl just so happened to be my daughter. I wonder how that got in there?

—GAME LANDS MAINTENANCE
SUPERVISOR JOHN HARDENSTINE, COLUMBIA
CROSSROADS